Hawaii Marine B Section

August 30, 2002

BayFest 2002 was most crowded during Collective Soul's performance. The band members awed the crowds by playing several of their hit songs throughout the concert.

The singer, guitar player and songwriter for Collective Soul, Ed Roland, strums away on his guitar during one of the band's many songs during BayFest.

Lights from the concert shone out across the audience during the band's one and a half hour set. Lead Singer Ed Roland entertained his audience with a number of songs.

It's back to the basics of rock-n-roll for pop rock's Collective Soul

Back in the early 90s, when bands like the Seattle-based Nirvana and Pearl Jam had just created the sound of alternative music, a flurry of sound-alikes abruptly appeared on the music scene to capitalize off the newly-popular sounds.

Record labels scrambled to sign bands like the Gin Blossoms and the Toadies.

Radios blared the sound for quite some time, but naturally, the hype died down and the craze settled back to the level of any other music genre at the time.

Most of the sound-alike bands simply faded off the scene, while others had violent brake ups. Only a few of these bands still exist today, on a plane that creates cutting edge, inspiring music.

One of these bands is Collective Soul.

After five full albums and numerous tours, Collective Soul is still making music and still touring.

On Aug. 16, they visited MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay, for a full-length concert at BayFest 2002.

In what was undoubtedly the highpoint of the weekend for many festival goers, the band seemed to abandon their recently given "Pop" title by sticking with solid rock tunes throughout their show.

During a particularly heavy set, lead singer Ed Roland eagerly announced, "We have a new label and we are going back to where we came from. That's just guitars and drums — no more loops."

The crowd went absolutely nuts for Collective Soul.

Hawaii generally doesn't land too many mainland acts, but when it does have a guest, fans show up and expect nothing but the best from the performers. They played flawlessly throughout the night.

Much of the audience seemed to know the words to just about every song the played. Collective Soul even unveiled three brand new songs, set to be released on a new album next year, a rock album.

Backstage, the Georgia-based rock band took time to greet a few lucky individuals who won contests to meet them. They made the rounds signing autographs and taking photographs with adoring fans.

Lead Guitarist Joel Koesche wails away on his axe during the band's performance at BayFest 2002.

Maybe it had something to do with them being from the south, but they were not stuck up and seemed happy to be where they were.

Even if a lot of the audience had never heard of Collective Soul before the concert, many left as fans.

Fans of Collective Soul went wild from the time the band came onstage until the time they left. Many members of the audience sang along with the band.

MCCS’ BayFest buzz goes nationwide

Edward Hanlon V
MCCS Marketing

This year, BayFest attracted more than 29,000 visitors. The crowds were mostly composed of Marines, Sailors and local residents, many of whom are from the Windward side or who have been to BayFest many years in a row. However, there are also some untold stories of dedicated patrons from places much further away. Travel Agent Cindy Babiak, for example, came all the way from Boulder, Colo., to see Collective Soul. After hearing good reviews about BayFest in one of her previous trips to the islands, she and her friends made a vacation out of BayFest 2002. Marine Corps Community Services’ Marketing Department first heard about

Babiak when she wrote to purchase a presale ticket. “Being a military brat,” said Babiak, “it sounded like a great way to spend the day.” Afterwards, Babiak found out that Collective Soul would be playing, which “sealed the deal.” The MCCS Marketing Department told Babiak that it was pleased to find out that the buzz about BayFest has gone nationwide. The department asked her to help it do a follow-up report on experiences at the event. Babiak had numerous compliments for BayFest, including the diverse activities, great beer, great location and overall fun. Besides Collective Soul, her favorite performers were members of Liberty Call, the Marine band. Babiak was just one of the non-resident supporters of BayFest 2002. From now on, she said, “I will be sure to suggest it [BayFest] to my clients for an activity.” The recommendation further proves what an extraordinary event BayFest is.

Prevention can protect most people from IDENTITY THEFT

NAPS
Featurettes

Identity theft and credit card fraud are serious, growing problems in America. The Federal Trade Commission recently reported that identity theft was number one on the top 10 list of consumer fraud complaints in 2001.

What is identity theft?
Identity theft is obtaining someone else's personal information such as a driver's license or Social Security number, and pretending to be that person in order to commit financial or criminal fraud.

Someone stealing a credit card receipt from the trash and using that information falsely can initiate this type of theft. However, a higher percentage of incidents are attributed to lost or stolen wallets and stolen mail.

How not to be a victim
Providian Financial, one of the largest credit card issuers in the U.S., takes an active role in working to educate consumers on how to avoid becoming a victim of identity theft and fraud.

Chris Lewis, vice president and chief privacy officer for Providian, explains, "Victims of identity theft often don't discover the crime until they are turned down for a loan or credit card because of debts accumulated in their name. There are several, simple, preventative measures that Providian encourages our cardholders to take to protect themselves."

- Tips to protect yourself
- Watch your mail. Scan the mail regularly for your credit card bills and call the credit card company if your bill is late.
 - Confirm it hasn't been diverted to a different address without your knowledge. Make sure personal information is not visible through or on the outside of an envelope you're mailing.
 - Keep track of your credit cards. Carefully review your credit card statements for unauthorized use as soon as you receive them each month.
 - Take your credit card receipts with you after a purchase, tear them up or shred them when you no longer need them, and do not dispose of them in public trash containers.
 - Be wary of who's on the phone. If you do not initiate the call, be cautious when giving out personal information over the telephone.
 - Be wary of callers who ask you to send them money.
 - Use caution when purchasing online. If you use your credit card to make purchases on the Internet, be sure that you are using a browser that encrypts personal information and that the Web site you are using initiates a secure session (SSL).

NAPS

- Review your credit report. You should request a copy and review your credit report at least once a year, to make sure no one has applied for credit in your name or is using one of your accounts.
- Request a copy from one of the three major credit reporting agencies: Experian (www.creditexpert.com), TransUnion (www.tuc.com) and Equifax (www.equifax.com).

tity theft prevention
Following these simple rules and using common sense can help keep your personal financial information safe and secure.

Additionally, the Federal Trade Commission has organized a program to combat identity theft in the FTC's kNOW Fraud Campaign.

Electronic checking conversion allows faster processing Consumers should use this convenience wisely, get a receipt for voided checks, says the Federal Reserve

NAPS

It pays for consumers to learn about electronic check conversion—a new payment method similar to check cards or debit cards that is a faster way for stores to process payments made by checks.

It usually works like this: A clerk asks you for a check that is completely filled out, partially filled out, or blank, then runs the check through a machine and

- hands the voided check back to you with your receipt.
- If you pay using electronic check conversion, the Federal Reserve Board recommends that you:
- Be certain you have enough money in your account to immediately cover the payment.
 - Make sure the clerk gives you a receipt.
 - Be certain the check was voided and returned to you.

- When you receive your checking statement from your bank, be sure the charges on your statement match your records.

Consumers can learn more about electronic check conversions and ways to protect themselves by visiting the Federal Reserve's Web site, www.federalreserve.gov/pubs/checkconv/default.htm.

The smart consumer is forearmed.

Parents must begin now to raise money-savvy kids

NAPS
Featurettes

Your kids, and their influential friends, probably spend significantly more money than you and your friends did at their age. What's more, savvy marketers are there to encourage them.

With your help, however, kids can learn the value of money to save and even invest. The key is to make financial learning an everyday part of family life.

Beginning from the time your children can count to 10, let them help count change at the grocery store. When they begin asking for a new CD each week, use the opportunity to teach that resources are not unlimited.

Children need to learn the difference between wants and needs, and between immediate gratification and delayed gratification. Make some things come with a labor equation, e.g., two hours of raking leaves equals one movie ticket.

NAPS

- Here are some more ways to teach your kids the value of money:
- Set a good example. Kids pick up buying patterns and attitudes about money from their parents.
 - Start early. Give kids an allowance as soon as they can count and identify coins. When they want something, use the magic words "your money." They'll think twice before spending.
 - As children become older, encourage saving for both short- and long-term purchases.

- Set up a child's own savings account.
- Teach teens how to research purchases and compare products.
- Encourage kids to earn their own money. They may just reconsider buying the latest fad jeans, if they know they have to work six hours to earn them.

- Let children learn from their mistakes. Constantly bailing them out of overspending sends the wrong message that actions have no real consequences.

Fortunately, it's never too late to teach kids that "money doesn't grow on trees."

In the adult world, dollars have to be earned, saved and (if borrowed) returned with interest. If your children learn this now, they'll have a better chance for financial success as adults — all of which will be good for their future.
